J.H.P. Tyman, in Encyclopedia of Separation Science, 2000 Densitometric Analysis of Gallic Acid in Fermentation Liquors. One of the ways used for obtaining gallic acid (3,4,5-trihydroxybenzoic acid), an important intermediate in synthesis for the pharmaceutical and food industries, is by the acid hydrolysis of natural gallotannins, for example from gall nuts, tara pods or sumac leaves.

Some studies have already shown that these natural compounds are absorbed by the body and have the potential to reduce the risk of colon cancer. The current study deals with examining the growth inhibitory effect of the dietary phenolic phytochemical gallic acid (GA) against HCT-15 colon cancer cells.
